Foreword

Brigid Laffan

President of the European Policy Centre (EPC)

Declan Kelleher

Chair of the EPC Governing Board

In an increasingly contested political and geopolitical environment, the European Policy Centre is moving in new directions. Our influence is growing as an agenda-setter, network-builder and defender of liberal democracy, in addition to remaining a trusted source of high-quality policy analysis. Trump's return to the White House reinforced many of the challenges that EPC had been anticipating, from European security and economic coercion to the resilience of liberal democracy. Our work is sharpening European leaders' focus on what Europe must do in response.

EPC addressed increasing threats to democracy, which culminated in our Annual Conference on "Liberal Democracy Under Threat". Bringing together leading European policymakers, thinkers and EPC members, we demonstrate that defending democracy must become a central part of Europe's strategic response to a changing world.

The Stiftung Mercator-funded "Connecting Europe" project has enabled EPC to grow its convening power, connecting think tanks, civil society, policymakers and business across Europe and beyond. This was explicitly recognised when EPC was named one of On Think Tanks' "100 Think Tanks to Watch in 2025," highlighting its innovation, collaboration and impact.

EPC publications, media presence, events and particularly our growing LinkedIn reach enabled EPC ideas to travel well beyond those directly participating in our work. Combined with our expanding convening power, we are not merely contributing to, but also shaping European debates.

We would like to express our sincere gratitude to EPC's staff, members and many partners, in particular the King Baudouin Foundation, for their continued trust, support and engagement. Thanks to their professionalism, EPC continued to provide a trusted platform for evidence-based ideas, informed debate and practical policy solutions.

2025 was a year when the world moved significantly closer to many of the risks EPC had been warning about. Our response was not to retreat into analysis, but to become a more active political-policy actor: generating ideas, building coalitions and networks, convening those who can act, and defending the principles on which European integration and liberal democracy depend.

Message from EPC's Management Team

The growing divisions of political debates in 2025 reaffirmed the importance of independent research, non-partisan insight and forward-looking analysis. EPC was a thought leader on economic security, EU reform and societal resilience, including health security and the brain economy.

The inaugural Brussels Economic Security Forum (BESF) helped to consolidate our position as a leading European voice on economic security. With the active participation of 250 policymakers, business leaders and experts from six continents, the Forum demonstrated EPC's ability not only to generate ideas, but to build international policy communities around emerging challenges.

The year also highlighted the growing importance of resilience in all its dimensions – economic, societal, geopolitical and democratic. Amid growing political polarisation and pressure on liberal democracy, we intensified our work on democratic resilience and the interaction between national politics and European integration.

EPC's most attended event focused on Europe's housing crisis; the most widely read publications examined EU's place in a changing world. Our 2025 flagship report "A Test of Times" envisions an EU that "thinks enlarged" and is future- and crisis-proof, with a modernized operating system. We highlight the need for an "Open Supra-Governmental Avantgarde" (OSGA), through which 'willing and able' members could intensify cooperation, outside the EU's framework if necessary.

Our monitoring of political developments in the member states and candidate countries highlighted links between national politics, European decision-making, liberal democracy and the EU's capacity to act and deliver. Through close collaboration with our members, EU institutions and global partners, we continued to bridge expertise across policy areas and strengthen our reach. We also expanded our use of AI to enhance internal processes and our digital presence.

These achievements reflect the professionalism and dedication of EPC's staff, analysts, Strategic Council, Advisers, Academic Fellows, Governing Board and members. We thank EPC's supporters and friends, particularly the King Baudouin Foundation and Stiftung Mercator, who make our work possible.

Looking ahead, we remain committed to making Europe stronger, more secure, innovative and better for its citizens, while defending and renewing the liberal-democratic foundations of European integration. In an increasingly contested world, our ambition is a more resilient Europe, acting collectively and shaping its own future.

AMBITION AND ACHIEVEMENTS

Explaining the EU and delivering research, analysis and concrete recommendations to EU policymakers.

European Migration and Diversity

Leading informed debate, rigorous analysis and connecting migration to Europe's wider strategic challenges, EPC enables forward-looking policy dialogues on one of the defining issues facing Europe today. Linking migration governance to foreign policy, security, development and international cooperation, as well as national politics, EPC broadened the scope of migration debates beyond traditional policy silos. Headed by Dr Alberto Horst-Neidhardt, the European Migration and Diversity Programme asked if and how the EU will deliver on its ambitious migration and asylum policies following landmark reforms.

Migration and Asylum: Bridging Legal, Political and Societal Concerns

To enable sustainable and rights-based migration policies, EPC's multidisciplinary analysis connects various dimensions and perspectives. In 2025, it continued to shape discussions on migration policy implementation, which will determine the success or failure of the recent reforms. EPC migration analysts took a strategic and evidence-based approach, looking beyond short-term political signalling to identify gaps and propose pragmatic policy options for more effective migration policies.

An EPC discussion with the European Commissioner for Internal Affairs and Migration, Magnus Brunner, explored more balanced approaches to migration and implementation of the EU's migration and asylum agenda. The "fireside chat" also addressed the EU response to member states that do not comply with EU law and policies.

In 2025, EPC analysts researched labour migration, exploring how Europe can enhance its attractiveness to global talent and strengthen its competitiveness, with a focus on the international mobility of students and trainees.

Migration Diplomacy, Returns and Climate Mobility

With shrinking development assistance budgets, geopolitical instability and a weakening multilateral order, EPC launched research on the EU's migration partnerships with neighbouring countries, examining its impact on broader European strategic objectives.

EPC contributed to the European Commission's 2025 proposal for a new Return Regulation, through inputs to their study on gaps and needs in relevant EU law. A joint policy dialogue with the Egmont Institute on the EU's approach on returns, held shortly after the Commission's policy proposal was presented, convened representatives of the European Parliament, Commission and Polish Presidency.

Collaboration with the European University Institute strengthened research on climate mobility. EPC increasingly connected migration policy with demographic change, labour market needs, climate adaptation and the long-term integration of displaced Ukrainians. Together with the Egmont Institute, the International Red Cross and PICUM (a network for undocumented migrant rights),

Looking ahead to more Resilient and Sustainable Policies

Migration policy implementation, diplomacy and labour and climate migration will rise on the EPC 2026 agenda. It is deepening its analysis of the trade-offs between security, competitiveness, solidarity and fundamental rights. As the EU enters a decisive phase in migration governance, EPC continues to ask how EU policies can be reconfigured in a post-liberal age of competing priorities.

With implementation of the Common European Asylum System reforms underway, EPC will assess whether member states can overcome persistent compliance gaps and translate legislative agreements into effective practice. EPC's research is increasing its ability to anticipate future policy challenges.

In anticipation of the 2026 Outlook Forum, EPC will adopt foresight methods, already explored in the paper on resilient migration policy, "EU migration and asylum at a crossroads: Planning for uncertainty." EPC's research and analysis of the "New Pact for the Mediterranean: Turning vision to impact" is leading to a 2026 event with EU Commissioner Dubravka Suica. EPC will continue to lead rigorous analysis and principled policy discussions in a field increasingly characterised by polarisation and political short-termism.

European Politics and Institutions

As the European Union navigates continued political fragmentation and pressure on democratic norms, EPC works to strengthen the legitimacy, accountability and responsiveness of EU governance. Led by Associate Director Dr. Corina Stratalut, the “European Politics and Institutions” Programme focused on the question “How should the EU reform its governance to become more strategic, efficient and legitimate?”

The Test of Times: Democracy and Reform under Pressure

The European Commission invited EPC to contribute to its 2025 consultations on the EU

Democracy Shield, the Union’s new initiative on democratic resilience – a measure of the programme’s standing in debates on democracy and illiberal trends.

EPC’s flagship publication, “A Test of Times”, outlines the strategic choices facing the EU in a context of geopolitical volatility. It argues that enlargement and EU internal reform must advance in tandem and reframes enlargement as a strategic necessity rather than a procedural exercise.

European Elections, Citizens and Democratic Innovation

Through its “EU Democracy Reform Observatory, EPC

examined citizen participation, democratic innovation and how EU decision-making can become more inclusive, transparent and participatory. Four EPC analysts specialised in a range of EU policies scrutinised and debated the European Commission’s first 100 days with participants of an in-person event.

The “Elections Monitor” series continues to analyse national elections and their implications for European democracy. In 2025, coverage included elections in Germany, Romania, Poland, Portugal, Kosovo and Albania.

EPC’s evidence-based analysis of Generation Z and the widening gender divide has fed directly into emerging Brussels debates on masculinity, social cohesion and equality. For example, its discussion paper “From Provider to Precarious” explored how young men’s economic decline is fuelling the current antifeminist backlash.

Connecting the EU, Capitals and Candidates

EPC’s long-running research on the accession process – particularly on the conditionality and the credibility of the EU’s promises – underpins its role as a trusted platform for dialogue between EU institutions and partners in the Western Balkans.

In 2025, EPC hosted the Minister of Foreign Affairs of North Macedonia, Timčo Mucunski, and the Prime Minister of Montenegro, Miloško Spajić, as well as the Commissioner for Enlargement, Marta Kos. A workshop on civil society involvement in the accession process reinforced cooperation with regional think tanks and civil society actors, while timely events on Serbia provided deeper insight into domestic political developments.

Outlook: Values, Vision and Foresight

Looking ahead, EPC turns to the fundamental values and vision of the EU: “How and why should the EU and its members make the “United in Diversity” motto ring true again?” Its analysis treats diversity as an asset, linking to EPC’s research on EU migration policy.

EPC’s foresight work builds alternative scenarios for European democracy to 2030 and sets out the policy choices that follow from each. In 2026, the EPC is launching an annual Outlook Forum to share that work with EPC member organisations, media and EU policymakers – and to keep testing the EU’s democratic architecture, policymaking and delivery against what is coming.

Europe's Political Economy

The EU's political economy is under increasing pressure. Intensifying geoeconomic tensions, the erosion of the rules-based economic order and the growing use of economic coercion are forcing the EU to rethink how it protects its economic interests. Led by Associate Director Georg Riekeles, EPC's "Political Economy Programme" asked: "How can the EU strengthen its economic security and deal with the trade-offs of economic crises and transitions?"

Leading the way on Economic Security

EPC was the first European policy think tank to put economic security firmly on the EU policy agenda. Its framing paper, "Europe's Make-or-Break Moment: Putting Economic Security at the Heart of the EU's Strategic Agenda" and European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen's seminal EPC address on EU-China economic relations in March 2023 helped shape the early stages of Europe's economic security debate. Against the backdrop of the hardening international environment, the EPC has continued to explore EU responses to economic dependencies and coercion.

In 2025, EPC launched the inaugural Brussels Economic Security Forum (BESF). Held 5–6 June 2025, it brought together over 300 participants from five continents, including ministers from key third-country partners, three European Commissioners, CEOs and leading experts. European at its core, but global in outlook, BESF is founded on the conviction that Europe's economic security depends on building a strong community of like-minded international partners. It now connects leading think tanks from more than 10 countries, whose experts contributed to a joint compendium of research ahead of the now annual Forum.

Shaping EU policy on Competitiveness and Strategic Investment

EPC has helped shape the EU debate on competitiveness and the single market over several years. Joint research with the European Investment Bank helped establish mid-cap enterprises as a distinct category in EU single market policy. This work, alongside policy proposals on emerging critical technologies, was referenced in the 2024 Draghi Report and the EU's 2025 Competitiveness Report.

Europe's investment gap was at the heart of EPC's work on the interconnected economic, technological, climate and security challenges facing the EU. Its report on making the EU a strategic investment power was widely cited. Its subsequent analysis of the proposed European Competitiveness Fund contributed to discussions on the next Multiannual Financial Framework. EPC's proposal for an EU instrument capable of taking equity stakes in critical technological and industrial assets was also reflected in the European Commission's Tech Sovereignty package.

EPC's 2026 Economic Policy Outlook

EPC's work on strategic autonomy, economic security and competitiveness continues to be guided by the question:

“How can the EU best leverage its liberal economic model to succeed in a fracturing global order, characterised by coercion and escalating crises?”

In 2026, EPC is consolidating the BESF as a leading year-round platform shaping international and European policies. European digital and technological sovereignty and the impact of AI on competitiveness, security and the social contract are new focus areas at the top of the EPC agenda.

Sustainable Prosperity for Europe

2025 marked the beginning of many post-election mandates, including of the European Parliament, the European Commission and the United States' national administration. At the start of President Ursula van der Leyen's second term, EPC followed and analysed the development of the EU's future budget priorities. Headed by Stefan Sipka, the "Sustainability Prosperity for Europe" Programme asked how to complete the Green Deal and ensure its implementation after the EU elections.

More broadly, EPC explored how to improve communication on the green transition, advance clean, secure and affordable energy, scale up circular economy and protein diversification, and how to enable investments in the clean transition. Beyond Europe, EPC discussed green partnerships, climate diplomacy, and examined the implications of the second Trump mandate on the green agendas, including transatlantic collaboration.

EU announcements on Ocean Policy and Intergenerational Fairness

Several European Commissioners made key policy announcements and launched consultations at EPC events. Commissioner Glenn Micallef announced the work on the EU Intergenerational Fairness Strategy; Commissioner Costas Kadiš presented the European Oceans Pact, right after it was launched at the Third UN Ocean Conference in Nice. Commissioner Jessika Roswall spoke about the upcoming Circular Economy Act.

Linking the Green Transition to other Political Agendas

To help advance its thought leadership, relevance and impact, EPC featured innovative policy analysis and debates that linked the green transition with other political agendas, including on competitiveness, digitalisation and security.

EPC analysts explored the case for integrated land use that would enable at the same time energy generation, food production and nature restoration. EPC examined the synergies and trade-offs between the clean energy transition and economic security. It explored how defence spending, with its increased budgets, could be used to scale up European green steel.

EPC looked at the linkages between climate adaptation and the Intergenerational Fairness agenda and between the EU's coastal areas and the circular economy. EPC continued examining the role of digitalisation in advancing sustainability agendas, including on sustainable products and land use.

Looking Ahead to a Green Transition context of rising populism and geopolitical tensions?”

In the ever-changing political context, EPC analyses the policy mix around the energy transition, industrial decarbonisation, circular economy, ocean governance, climate resilience, nature restoration and protein transition. Integrating its climate perspective across all its thematic Programmes, EPC’s sustainability-related work also contributes to the ambition to help safeguard European liberal democracy.

Transnationalising policy debates: Connecting Europe

2025 unfolded against a challenging backdrop for civil society organisations and think tanks across Europe. Democratic backsliding, increasing political polarisation and growing pressure on independent organisations created a more difficult operating environment. Headed by Johannes Greubel, the Transnationalisation Programme asked how to enhance transnational and transversal policy debates on major strategic issues across Europe?

Connecting Europe and Community Building

Funded by Stiftung Mercator, the “Connecting Europe” project seeks to connect civil society to EU policy debates in Brussels, thus transnationalising the exchanges on EU level. It supports civil society organisations (CSOs) through capacity building, advice and community action.

One of the key examples of this function is the project’s “Rule of Law Community”. EPC hosted more than 40 CSOs working on democracy, human rights and the rule of law for a two-day community meeting. The community has evolved into an active network, with regular exchanges and coordinated advocacy efforts, coordinated jointly with Democracy Reporting International.

Contributing to the start of EU budget negotiations, EPC brought the role of civic space to the forefront of resilient democracy in publications such as “Securing Europe’s civic space: Investing in democracy in the next MFF”. Through its events on the civic space, rule of law and enlargement, EPC hosted MEPs Tineke Strik,

© Canva

Daniel Freund and Michał Wawrykiewicz, and presidents of the European and Social Committee and of the European Fund for the Balkans.

Transnational and Transversal Policy Debates

By “thinking enlarged”, the EPC’s “Connecting Europe” project also brought organisations from EU candidate countries to Brussels to help shape European political discussions that reflect perspectives from across the continent. The concrete potential of CSOs beyond the EU was highlighted in the paper “Thinking enlarged: Civil Society’s role in preparing for EU enlargement.”

European Think Tank Collaboration

Focusing on its peers among civil society, EPC also expanded its think tank cooperation in Europe and beyond. It regularly collaborates with more than 50 think tank members, including the “Think Tank Lab” and “On Think Tanks”, and is an active member of the 50-year-old Trans European Policy Studies Association (TEPSA). Together, they address common challenges: funding sustainability, institutional resilience and the consequences of a more hostile political environment. They continue to lay the groundwork for evidence-based advocacy on behalf of the sector.

Looking Ahead to a More Resilient European Democracy

EPC continues to grow its role as a hub for integrated and inclusive policy debates and knowledge-sharing across Europe, based on a community of partners that exchange and jointly build capacities and advocacy efforts. Partnership-building and community-based approaches to policy engagement continue to deepen in 2026, guided by the question of how to promote transnational dialogue in a climate of renationalisation and shrinking civic space?

As pressures on independent expertise continue to grow, EPC will place greater emphasis on supporting democratic resilience, protecting civic space and extending its European networks across the globe. In Brussels, it remains a trusted and well-known convener of civil society organisations, think tanks and policymakers.

Ahead of its 30-year anniversary, the EPC is also deepening its foresight expertise. Bringing together future scenarios based on multi-disciplinary research, 2026 will culminate in EPC's first Outlook Forum.

Europe in the World

As the rules-based world order erodes, the EU and its principles of multilateral cooperation are feeling the impact of massive geopolitical shocks. Russia's war against Ukraine, conflict in the Middle East, strained EU-China relations and uncertainty over future US security commitments have intensified pressure on the EU to act faster and with greater strategic purpose. In 2025, EPC worked to redefine the EU as a geopolitical actor, posing the question: "Aiming to redefine Europe's global engagement, how can the EU repower at a time of global uncertainty?"

Headed by EPC Director Almut Möller, the "Europe in the World" team provides foreign policy briefings to influential decisionmakers and institutions, as well as for – and tailored to – EPC member organisations, in Brussels and beyond. In 2025, EPC analysts explored EU relations with rising middle powers including South Africa, Indonesia and Australia, with the goal of strengthening security and restoring global influence. Committed to the EPC's diverse perspectives, it is engaged with the Women, Peace and Security agenda.

Beyond Europe: EPC on the Global Stage

EPC expanded its global reach in 2025. New partnerships with government and civil society actors in Japan, India and the broader Indo-Pacific continue to bear fruit. Partnerships with Türkiye and the Middle East have resulted in concrete EPC activities, including an online event series on the Middle East and "Unpacking Turkish Foreign Policy".

EPC also continued to lead the "EU and China Think Tank Exchanges", working with the EU Delegation to China and think tanks and universities across the EU and China. Regular exchanges on a full range of issues have placed EPC as a leading, impartial and influential voice on EU–China relations.

The growing European and global partnerships are laying the ground for effective think tank networks and platforms, involving all themes and Programmes covered by the EPC.

- The "Northern Europe Platform" was launched in 2025, as an umbrella for activities in the Arctic-Nordic-Baltic regions.
- The "Global Think Tank Partnerships Initiative" is growing strategic ties with think tanks across the globe, including by deploying the EPC's vast network of European think tanks via its "Connecting Europe" project.

Global partners include the Institute of Geoeconomics (Japan), the Korea Development Institute (South Korea), the Africa Policy Research Institute (Nigeria/Germany), the Atlantic Council (US) and the Royal United Services Institute (UK), the world's oldest defence and security think tank.

Transnational collaborations enable EPC and its partners to ground their analysis on evidence and insights from a diversity of geographical, sectoral, cultural and national perspectives. It also helps build coalitions of research and policy advocacy to counter a fragmenting world.

"The Language of Power", Defence and Security to spend Europe's extra defence budgets. The debates were underpinned by publications on European deterrence and defence in the age of mass precision warfare. EPC also influenced the European Commission's White Paper on Defence, with its analysis of the mobilisation of industrial, human and financial resources for defence purposes.

Doubling down on Ukraine

With the Deputy Head of Programme, Amanda Paul, the "Europe in the World" team is the leading Brussels think tank for activities related to Ukraine. It regularly cooperates with Ukraine's leadership, civil society and other key stakeholders to research, convene decisionmakers and enable Ukrainian advocacy. It researches the global impact of Russia's war and helps to debunk Russian disinformation.

EPC has focused on developing concrete ideas for a future peace agreement and security guarantees for a just and sustainable end to the war. It also shaped policy agendas by drawing greater attention to issues that receive less coverage: the situation of Ukrainian prisoners of war and civilian detainees, stolen children and the heinous situation in Ukraine's temporarily occupied territories. Highlighting Ukraine's accession process and EU sanctions on Russia have also positioned the EPC as an influential actor on Ukraine.

EPC's Global Outlook

In its next decade, EPC will continue to "go global" and grow its foresight work. EPC's flagship annual Outlook Paper provides foresight and political scenarios on the future of Europe in the World. The 2026 edition will serve as the intellectual foundation for the EPC Outlook Forum. EPC's global work will address the how Europe can reassert peace and "shape a foreign policy that stands up against

Health and Societal Resilience

With social and health security directly impacting citizens' lives, EPC examines a range of interconnected political challenges, beyond defence and economic security. Headed by Associate Director Elizabeth Kuiper, the Health and Societal Resilience Programme continues to call for more holistic and multidisciplinary policymaking. In 2025, her team addressed the strategic question: "How can the EU strengthen societal resilience for a strong and secure Europe?"

Critical Medicines, Women's Health and Inequalities

EPC plays a central role in policy discussions on health resilience and competitiveness in the biopharmaceutical sector. In March 2025, the Rapporteur of the European Parliament in charge of the Critical Medicines Act invited EPC to present its research and advice to Parliament. The European Parliament and EPC also co-hosted a public debate on women's health and its integration in the EU's gender equality strategy.

EPC's work on EU health resilience culminated in many recommendations on "Rebuilding Governance and Resilience out of the Pandemic" (REGROUP), based on empirical evidence and a normative evaluation of COVID-19 policy responses.

Brain Health and Hybrid Intelligence

Linking AI to the brain economy, EPC advances discussions on how human cognitive capabilities can drive Europe's competitiveness. Working with global leaders and experts in the brain economy, including EPC's co-director of the Brussels Economic Security Forum, Paweł Świeboda, EPC co-authored commentaries driving the discussion. Publications such as "How the brain economy can unlock new approaches to AI" promote neuroscience-informed policies and investment in cognitive skills and mental health. The larger European ambition is to progress in an AI that amplifies human potential rather than undermines it.

AI and the Future of Work and Health

With AI and its EU regulation at a pivotal moment, EPC is guiding European decisionmakers to enable AI to enhance European innovation in healthcare and the broader economy, while also considering its social implications. Dialogues such as "AI in Health: Navigating the future of European healthcare" brought together policymakers, researchers, and industry to address trust, privacy and the integration of AI across research, innovation and clinical care.

Affordable Housing

EPC has contributed to elevating housing to a strategic EU priority, highlighting the need for collaboration among municipal, national, regional and European government institutions. Drawing on examples from Denmark, Spain, Poland and Czechia, the EPC has highlighted the importance of empowering municipalities and regions through access to EU funding, technical support and co-investment mechanisms.

The European Commission's Director General for Employment, Social Affairs and Inclusion and the Chair of the EU's Housing Task Force led discussions at the EPC's most attended event in 2025 on "Investment in social and affordable housing". The participants explored how the EU can enable social and affordable housing through innovative financial instruments, including social bonds, a social impact index and a broader social taxonomy.

EPC's Outlook for Societal Resilience

EPC will continue to zoom in on whole-of-society resilience, addressing the economic implications of demographic changes, the digital transition including AI, and the social consequences of the green transition. In 2026 EPC asks the strategic question: "How can social policies contribute to restoring agency and trust in EU institutions?"

EPC's increasing focus on European preference in the health sector is enhancing its policy work around critical medicines and European biopharmaceutical innovation. Demography research is leading to evidence-based recommendations for greater intergenerational solidarity. The series of events and publications on women's health will also continue in 2026 and beyond.

GOVERNANCE

The EPC is committed to transparency, independence and drawing from a multitude of perspectives and nationalities in its governance model.

Governing Board

The main function of the Governing Board is to provide EPC's strategic direction, monitor and evaluate its operations and implementation of its strategic plan. Powers relating to day-to-day management are delegated to the Chief Executive, who acts as EPC's Legal Representative.

The Governing Board meets three to four times per year. Members are appointed by the General Assembly, which is made up of former and current Board members. In line with Belgian law, the General Assembly meets once a year to formally approve the annual accounts and adopt the budget for the year ahead.

Financing

The European Policy Centre (EPC) is committed to sound financial management and to transparency in respect of its funding sources. EPC is an independent think tank and none of the financing it receives affects its independence in any way. By the same token, any financial support received for EPC activities does not commit the funding organisations. The views expressed in publications are solely those of the authors.

EPC’s total income in 2025 was €5,822,086. It ended the financial year with a surplus of €14,845, bringing the equity capital to €1,686,184.

Approximately 21% of EPC’s 2025 funding came from grants. The King Baudouin Foundation, EPC’s strategic partner, provided a grant of €400,000. Stiftung Mercator supported EPC with a grant of €436,135 for the joint initiative “Connecting Europe”. Equinor donated €290,000 to the Friends of EPC Fund. The EU-funded CERV Programme (Citizens, Equality, Rights and Values) provided €290,000.

Membership fees accounted for 17% of EPC’s budget, with a total of €986,031. The remaining 57% of funds, a total of €3,332,42, came from a wide range of organisations, in the form of support for events and publications.

King Baudouin
Foundation

Working together for a better society

The King Baudouin Foundation has been a strategic partner to EPC since 2002. A Belgian public benefit foundation, it fosters cohesion and builds bridges within Europe.

The partnership contributes to the European integration process by setting the stage for informed debates about EU policies with a wide range of stakeholders.

Co-funded by the European Union

The Citizens, Equality, Rights and Values (CERV) Programme co-funded EPC's operations from 2022 to 2025, through the project ELEVATED. In line with EPC's mission and CERV priorities, ELEVATED helped strengthen Europe's public sphere around values, policies and citizens' rights. It empowered citizens, especially youth movements, to actively participate in debates on the future of the EU, transnationalisation, democratic and fundamental rights, welfare and social inclusion.
